The first event probably will be a dinner at the Colony Club.

Pictorial Fabrics and Ornate Sleeves Distinguish New Clothes

Trousers as Substitute for Underskirts Beneath Evening Gowns Advocated.

By ANN RITTENHOUSE. Special Correspondence to The New York Herald.

POIRET urges sleeves to the floor; Lanvin insists that hats with small shells are correct; Cheruit discards underskirts for evening gowns and replaces them with straight trousers; Callot says it is quite wise to take off one's sleeves when entering the house or to wear them as bracelets; the Madeleines tell their patrons to extend their cloaks to the hat in the back; Molyneux says that the dignity and décolletage of Alexandrian England is best for draped frocks for evening; Patou, like Franklin, draws lightning from the skies for his frocks, and yet there are women who say there is nothing new in clothes in Paris.

Which reminds one of the Anzac who was asked to show his wound in the chest to an American woman. After she had examined the tiny hole made by the bullet that had bored its way through she said: "Oh, I thought it would be a large, ghastly wound."

"Good Lord," said the Anzac, "how much these American women expect!" So say the French couturiers and their sisters this season.

The Patter About the Pants. Those square trousers are stimulating the imagination of women. Even a sedate Baltimore girl is thinking of astonishing her dancing class by appearing in such costume.

The house of Cheruit on the Place Vendôme, which sponsors this innovation, has long been associated with conservatism, probably not as much so as the house of Worth, yet the best French women go there; and one finds there things that are expressive of fine French taste rather than those brave exploits in fabrics often done to catch the American dollar, or the designs of those who must be in the limelight in Paris or their occupation is gone.

When this house advocates trousers as substitutes for underskirts of silk beneath an evening gown of tulle, one feels that the object of the league to discuss and study the political, legal, industrial and social questions of the day.

Don Marquis (Donald Robert Perry MacMarquis), editor of the "Sun Dial" column in The Sun, will be the guest of honor of the evening and will speak on "Columbus, America and the Anglo-Baxon." Dr. Alexander Cumming will preside and Mrs. Maud Zella Herrick will be the hostess. After a reception there will be dancing.

The Women's Club of New Rochelle will open its musical season on next Tuesday afternoon at 8 o'clock. Miss Juliette Arnold will give a piano recital.

The Woman's Republican Club, Mrs. James G. Wentz, president and founder, will hold a reception at the Plaza next Tuesday. The guests of honor will be Major and Mrs. Henry H. Curran, Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Lockwood, Mr. Vincent Gilroy, Mrs. Sarah C. Gilroy and Miss Helen Varick Boswell.

Girls Clubs League Opens Clothes Shop

The National League of Girls Clubs, an organization of about 50,000 working women associated in evening recreational clubs, is here hoping through the success of the Clothes Tree Shop, opened last March at 624 Madison avenue, to be able to maintain its budget and carry on the promotion of the idea of the self-supporting, non-sectarian and self-governing type of working women's club throughout the country.

The shop held a fall fashion show at the home of Mrs. Bernard E. Pollak, 53 East Seventy-ninth street, last Thursday day, when girls of society acted as models to demonstrate the latest French fashions which have been brought over for the shop.

Costumes designed and sketched by Paul Poiret. Above on left, superb coat of black velvet with square sleeves and sides on red satin, embroidered with gold threads. Gray fox trims it; there are two ornamental buttons at the waist.

Second, afternoon gown of deep king's blue velvet and black velvet. The former is in the straight bodice, the latter in skirt and sleeves, both wide. Silver ornaments are at waist, and straps of silver ribbons weighted with tassels hang at intervals to hem.

Third, pictorial fabric, showing small warriors on horseback, built into a Russian gown after the fashion of an ancient skating costume. It is worn in Venice by an English woman. The color is French blue; there is no trimming but wide bands of gray fox.

Below, sumptuous Venetian gown of Capucine red satin covered with gold tracery, the sides and arm drapery of black velvet. The entire gown is built from two straight pieces of fabric which pass between the feet. Designed and sketched by Paul Poiret.

up sharply in the front, curved in a wide scallop at the top and diminishing to a small roll at back. It fits well down on the head, merely showing tangle locks of the hair. The house rarely departs from this type of head covering. The alternate is the spreading Winter-halter shape of colored felt, oh, so softly colored in mauve or gray, without plumage.

These hats are offered as suitable companions to the Eusemie frocks, which are called after Winter-halter by both Poiret and Lanvin. Poiret having made a brilliant picture of them in his open air theatre, called "L'Oasis."

Hip Bands of Pony Skin. To go back to the shells: they are interwoven with enough embroidery to keep them from heaviness and they are placed against a black velvet hat for Lanvin uses an astonishing amount of velvet, not only in headgear, but in gowns and suits. The majority of her street suits are in black or dark velvet, the hip length jackets held tightly to the figure by a wide band of fur, the ragged kind that gives somewhat the effect of fringe at the lower edge. As she, like Poiret and Callot, admires the fur called gazelle, much of it is on those velvet clothes. Cheruit admires pony, so does Callot, and this soft shining fur is on coats and wraps, also turned into superb cuffs that are quite too broad for the name, borrowed as they are from the days of D'Artagnan and Charles the Second.

With a broad hipband of glittering pony and a peasant hat covered with silken shells, the woman dressed by Lanvin suggests something medieval, something forceful, far away from Winter-halter and his prettiness. Cheruit also dips into power when knives into the flesh. Not only hard corns or soft corns, but every kind of corn or callus surrenders to "Gets-It" and peels off. It takes just a few seconds to stop the pain with two or three drops. Go to your drugstore today. Get a bottle of "Gets-It" Come but a trifle everywhere. Your money back if not satisfied. Mfd. by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago.
